Myra and its Harbor Andriake in Light of Recent Findings

The guest of AKMED's last lecture of the year was Professor Nevzat Çevik from Akdeniz University. In his presentation, Çevik explained how the data obtained at the excavations of Myra and its port Andriake since 2009 has increased in the last five years, allowing significant progress in our understanding of the settlements of Myra and Andriake and Lycian archaeology in general. Çevik stated that the original findings including Chalcolithic ceramics, Hellenistic terracotta, and many other small artifacts -together with unique architectural examples– shed light on the past of Myra and Andriake.

Koç University Alumni Visit AKMED

Alumni residing in Antalya met at AKMED on 10 December at an event organized by the Koç University Office of Alumni Relations and hosted by AKMED. Our graduates toured the AKMED library and visited the "Fauna and Coins" exhibition, which opened in October 2022 at Kaleici Museum.

“And the Stone Fell by Reason of Its Great Weight” A Talk on Ancient Marketplaces

AKMED director Professor Oğuz Tekin gave a presentation at the online discussion on ancient marketplaces organized by the Pera Museum on 13 December. In the last event of the discussion series “And the Stone Fell by Reason of Its Great Weight”, Professor Oğuz Tekin answered questions about ancient marketplaces during a session moderated by Yavuz Selim Güler. The discussion focused on the marketplaces in Anatolian city-states, which were leading centers of trade and daily shopping during the Classical, Hellenistic, and Roman Imperial periods, and offered a closer look at the goods, scales, weights, and coins used in these marketplaces.

Renovations

Renovation and maintenance work on the AKMED buildings and the Kaleiçi Museum started two months ago. Financed by the Vehbi Koç Foundation and executed by the Hece Restoration company, the renovations will continue until the end of February. The work will also include the restoration of the iconic hand-drawn decorations of the AKMED buildings.
